

Hand, Foot and Mouth Disease

What is Hand, Foot and Mouth Disease?

Hand, Foot and Mouth Disease (HFMD) is caused by an enterovirus which is moderately contagious, especially during the first week of illness. The virus can spread directly from person to person via saliva, stool and respiratory droplets. It can also spread indirectly via items contaminated with the secretions specified above.

HFMD affects primarily infants and young children, although adults may also be at risk.

What are the symptoms of HFMD?

- Fever
- Sore throat
- Painful mouth ulcers on the tongue, gums, inside of the cheeks or back of the throat
- Rash on the hands and feet - most commonly found on the palms and soles

The symptoms above typically resolve within 7 to 10 days. On very rare occasions, complications affecting the heart or brain may occur.

What should I do if my child has HFMD?

- Encourage oral fluid intake.
- Offer pain relief medications such as topical oral anaesthetic gels or analgesics (e.g. paracetamol) for the mouth ulcers to help improve oral intake.
- Treat high fever with antipyretics or fever medications to help your child feel more comfortable.
- Bring your child to see a doctor for further management if he or she has the following symptoms:
 - Prolonged fever
 - Rapid heart beat
 - Rapid breathing
 - Does not eat or drink well
 - Vomiting with dehydration
 - Lethargy and irritability
 - Drowsiness
 - Headache

How do I prevent the spread of HFMD?

- Children with HFMD should stay away from school for 1 week after the rash appears.
- Practise proper hygiene such as hand washing.
- Disinfect surfaces and articles such as toys and towels contaminated by the droplets, saliva or stool of children with HFMD properly with a diluted solution of bleach that contains chlorine.
