Young docs urged to veer away from specialising

More ‘generalists’ in fields like family medicine needed to serve ageing population

Dr Charmaine Kwan, who graduated from NUS medical school in 2013 to become a family physician, said, “I like the variety and I like that I do not have to specialise. I do not want to switch to family medicine.

“More generalists” in fields like family medicine needed to serve ageing population, said Dr Charmaine Kwan, who graduated from NUS medical school in 2013 to become a family physician. They need to know. He also spends time at polyclinics to switch to family medicine.

“More generalists” in fields like family medicine needed to serve ageing population, said Dr Charmaine Kwan, who graduated from NUS medical school in 2013 to become a family physician. They need to know. He also spends time at polyclinics to switch to family medicine.